He made inquiries all over the building, and found that stacks of blotting pads and disanceared from some offices, blank forms from others, writing paper and the like from still other offices.

The Doctor discovered that the janitor of the building allowed men to go through the offices and take away all the loose paper. Dr. Emerson went to the Criminal Courts Building at 6 a. m. yesterday. He was particularly watchful of one man whom he saw industriously brushing everything off desks and tables into the sack.

locking everything up in the evening, and then there is some one of the assistants here all night. We have, however, lost a number of things which put us to no end of Inconvenience. Whole files of papers have been carried away containing matter of importance to this office. We have also lost any quantity of blank paper, and two bushels of new blotting pads. Anything, he fact, that happened to be lying around was carried away. I do not think the men had any intention of wrongdoing. It was pure ignorance, and the wonder is that it has not proved more costly. I have heard of a number of articles of a like kind having been taken from other offices in the building, but prefer only to speak about our own. An investigation will of course be made."

New Candidate for the Laurenteship.

Dear Sir-Certainly we in America should have a poet laureate. There is nothing about that office that is inconsistent with republican institutions. What more glerious function for a representative government than the encourage-ment of arts and letters, and what better nethod of affording that encouragement than by exalting the pre-eminent poet to an office not exhiting the pre-eminent poet to an office not wholly unconnected with the spoils of victory? Only, to be consistent with our best traditions, the office of poet laureate should be elective, by popular vote, and for a fixed term—say three years. This would give everybody a chance and obviate professional jealousy.

Moregver, we should signalize the new era by allowing women to become eligible for election. In that event I should cast my vote for Elia Wheeler Wilcox, nutber of "Beautiful Snow," and other poems of unsation.

The third man is an ancient fisherman in the troubled waters of politics-Dwight Lawrence-who is said to know every politician in the State by his Christian name, official title and place of residence. On a busy night, when the destiny of the Republic trembles wobblingly in the balance, Thornton (who has lived on the Canada border) usually arrives first. Then simultaneously Berliner appears at the Fifth avenue main entrance and Law-rence emerges from the seclusion of the reading room, and with these three for a foundation a large and questioning crowd is soon gathered.
